When Marcyana began doing poorly in school, her mother got worried. "It was like my head was just going to explode," Marcyana explained. When a scan revealed she had a large tumor, neurosurgeons at Nationwide Children's Hospital knew she needed surgery. Unfortunately, Marcyana's tumor was in her brainstem - one of the most difficult places to operate. But at Nationwide Children's Hospital, our team is prepared and qualified to take on the most challenging cases. Today, Marcyana is healthy, happy and doing well in school.

Do you know a child like Marcyana that has been helped by Nationwide Children's Hospital? From a broken bone to a life-changing diagnosis, chances are you have been touched by the care Nationwide Children's provides.
